Why we're here

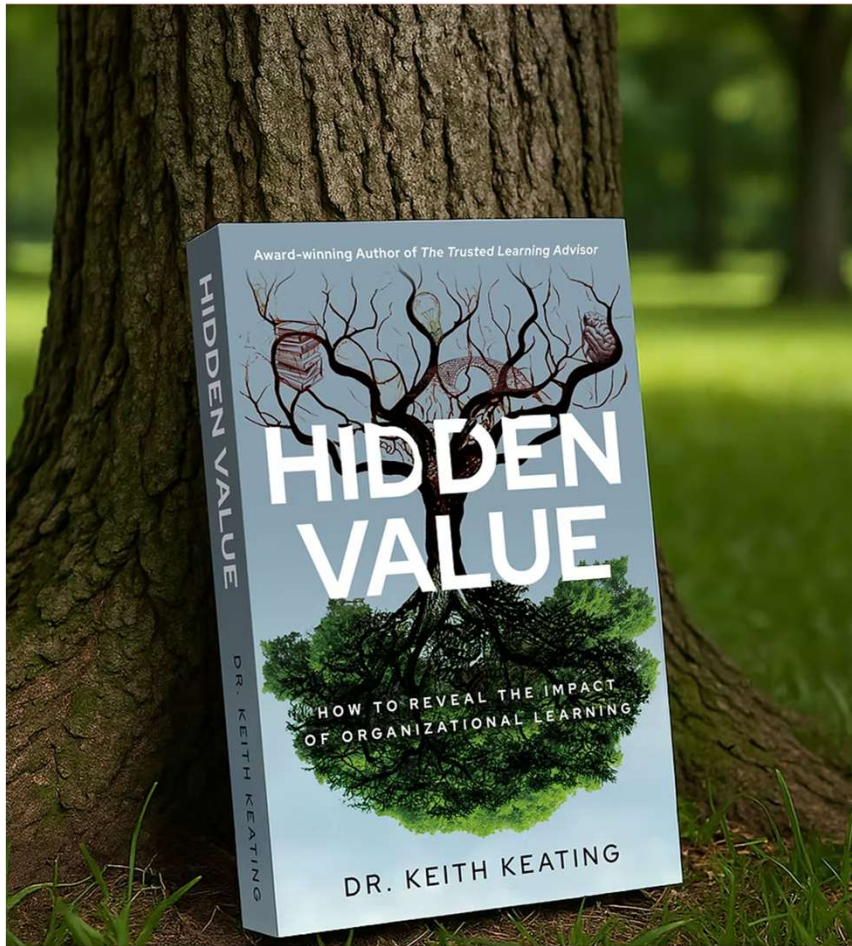

Elevating the human element of L&D through community connection, mutual support, and the stewardship of new ideas.

What this session is about

Reading this book is not required, but it's a framework to discuss the ideas and tools presented in this book.

In the the next meeting (the face to face session), we'll discuss the concepts and tools and how to start applying them in our work environments.

Transforming understanding of who we are as L & D

Learning & Development is not always seen as key to driving business value at organizations.

Dr. Keating challenges us to stop acting as order takers and instead become proactive value seekers and strategists.

This hits the crux of the value of this book.

Where's your organization currently?

Where is your organization currently on this spectrum?

Where would you like to be in six months to a year?

Takes orders from business leadership						Acts as a proactive value seeker

Let's take a moment to reflect and discuss

What does this gap (between order taker and strategist) say about our industry?

Can we move to the strategist role realistically?

What does it look like in your organization, on your team, within you?
